RESILES. Aug. 81.—The old saying that when the "cat's away the mice will play." appears to have been once more exemplified during the perer's absence from his metropolis, where miliary outrages have again become of fresent occurrence. An infantry Lieutenant ordered his men to fire at a passing train with black cartridges. "just for practice, you The result was that a half dozen railmay car windows were smashed and fully as may female passengers thrown into bysterica. a the same way. 'within the past few days a ame number of shrannel shots have miscarded from the Tegel artillery park, casting eximives among the villa residences in the mighborhood. The residents have been greatly siarmed by this indiscriminate firing, and are afraid to allow their children outdoor exercise. Public representations have been made to the military anthorities, but the latter deny all knowledge of such occurrences, and refuse to be interviewed on the ground that they are only responsible to the Emperor, and not to the strilians. They were, however, good enough to easent to the removal of a shrappel by soldiers from the little island of Scharfenberg on Lake Tegel, where it had landed and buried smalf in the ground.

A far worse stigma upon the conduct of the military caste in Germany has been left by the sufferings the Ninth Regiment of Infantry was made to endure in its terrible march through the district between Wurzburg and Marktbreit during the man ruyres. At 4 o'clock in the morning the regiment arrived, according to eders at the place of rendezvous, but for some mexplicable reason they were ke; t waiting till 5:15, so that the men, standing with their heavy knapsacks, were alreadytired before they started. They then set off at quick march and severed six and a quarter miles between the starting point and the village of Efbelstadt in an hour and a half. They hoped to be allowed to stop here and get a drink of water, but were ordered to go on without pause to Ochsenfurte. There they found all the villagers walting for them with offers of water wine. and beer. Some of the men were already terribly exhausted, and one was so evidently ill with fatigue and heat that a gentleman standing by offered to pay 20 marks for his conveyance to the nearest hospital, but the sergeant roughly refused, saying that the man was shamming. This man was one of the two who afterward died of sunstroke.

After a short halt the tired men were ordered on again, and now began the most dreadful part of the whole march. The noonday sun was at its bottest. There was not a particle of shade in the long, dusty road. Many of the men, staggering with heat and fatigue, could go no further, and threw themselves down on the banks by the roadside. The Colonel sent back his aides-de-camp to order all who were too fil to go further to fall out. They had not waited for permission. The road began to look like a battlefield. On each side of it lay fainting soldiers just as they had fallen out, with arms and accoutrements. At 12 o'clock they marched into Marktbreit.

but in what a condition! Two hundred men had been left on the road, and had to be conveyed in ambulances, carts, anything that could be got hold of, to the hospital. It was exactly like bringing in the wounded after a battle. The doctors did not know how to attend to so many patients. Many of the exausted men were picked up and carried home by the peasants living along the road. Three men are already dead, and several are dangeronsly ill. Col. Scholler, who is responsible for this extraordinary march, has been deprived of the command of the regiment, and a court martial will enquire into the affair.

There are a few other things in our military service which no one can understand. Two reeks ago a private of the volunteers named Skableowski shot and killed a workman named Berputh, who refused to leave the drill grounds after the soldier on duty as sentinel had commanded him three times to do so. This same Skables waki has now received the stripes and buttons which denote the rank of Sub-Lieu-leannt. It is not denied that in shooting Herputh he strictly followed the regulations, but it seems an unnecessary provocation to public segming thus to employ none the strictly forms.

The Bismarckian culturkampff, which has been proved to have been a failure in other carts of the country, is still continued in roland. It has been rarried on to such an extent that Prince Raditwill has been rejected by the Government as a candidate for the Episcopal See of Posen, though his appointment to a smaller ecclesiastical office in Strasburg is occally favored in Berlin.

processin sportsmen are much excited over the proposal to establish a new race course exclusively for the use of gentlemen riders belonging to the army. Military officers are the chief hashtude of race meetings and without them ho races course can exist, as most of the owners of horses belong to the highest aristocracy and are either active or retired officers of the army. It is thought that the Emperor is at the bottom of the chief.

It is thought that the Emperor is at the bot-tem of the scheme for an exclusive race meet-ing, as he dislikes seeing officers of his army acting as paid lockeys.

As the Berlin garrison is away from the cap-lial, eagaged in the fail manoruvres, the Kaiser on his resum found Berlin without the usual milliary force. A remarkable interpretation of the laws of servitude has just been rendered in one of the Perin courts, which has is ided that a servant girl remains under control of her father after attaining her majority so long as she remains unmarried, unless the father remounces all rights over he daturater. Afather also retains control over his son who is earning a livelihood in service, unless he specially grants his son the right to pursue this mode of living for an unlimited period. It is believed that this strange decision is due to the known intention of the imperor to enforce every measure that can aid in reveniture oid people of the reorst classes from being left in want.

CROSSING TENDERS.

Not Many Left Herenbouts, But the Cable Roads May Bring Them Back.

One of the most wearing and dangerous jobs on a railroad is tending a crossing. The hours are long the pay is small and the crossing tender is likely to be run over himself for trying to keep other people from being hurt. Crossing tenders are seldom considered in estimating a railroad's force, as they could all strike and the operations of the railroad would not be impeded. The trains could run as well with all the passengers and freight to be carried if there were not a crossing tender. They are one of the few branches of railroad employees who are not organized, and who never strike.

Tending crossings is the pension department of a railroad. It is where the old, broken-down employees of a railroad are put. When a man has lost a leg or an arm, or has become too feeble to work in the yards at the switches or around the trains, he is detailed to a crossing. where he sits in a little hut and waves a flag from time to time, or walks up and down the tracks. The pay is $35 to $60 a month, more a pension than wages for active service.

Around New York the crossing tender is going out of existence. There is an approach Around New York the crossing tender is going out of existence. There is an approach to him on the Tenth avenue freight line of the New York central, where a boy ridea an old borse and waves a red flag in front of the dummy engine that slowly pulls the freight trains up and down the avenue. Across the Harlem the crossing tender used to flourish but he is dying out on account of the sinking of the tracks. He has been driven back to Ringsbridge and Spuvten Duvvil. There the old crossings exist where the dires cross the Harlem, New York Central, and New York and Northern roads. Some of the old crossing tenders still live there, and sit in the huis which the commanies have provided to shelter them from the rain and snow. But even here invention has stepped in, Movable bars have been built on both sides of the track, connected with each other by chains, so that one man can operate the bars at several crossings. In old times each of these crossings would have had to have a tender of its own, but now the invention has cut down the number of tenders two-thirds. One man at Kingsbridge can work the bars for three or four crossings. It takes a younger and more active man, as thysical strength is required to move the bars, while a parayzed man who could see or hear could wave his flag.

Crossing tending is work that will break down any man with a nervous organization. It requires a phiegmatic man, and is better adapted to a German or Swede than to an American. It is also better work for an old man than a young one. The crossing tender simple can be found at all the towns along the Hudson hiver and places like Utlea. Eyracuse, Aroany, Rochestef, Troy, and Buffalo, where there have to be crossing tenders to warn off the people when the trains come along. The day's work here is one craim nervous tension about the work more severe than in running an engine, as the crossing tender so the reason and have an accident, or that while he may be standing on one track out of the way of one track and will or main him.
